To The Students of Southwest:

In a recent book entitled "Our Life Today," many interesting observations are made regarding high-school life and how to succeed in high school. The message that the author of the book means to convey is in substance, this:

Your biggest job is to make good as a member of your school community. A happy and successful school life requires that you do well in your studies, take part in school activities, and learn to work well and play well with other people.

I like the ring of these words because they call attention to a goal that isn't too high for anyone to reach and yet is attained only as the result of a well balanced and carefully planned program of endeavor, motivated by worthy ambition. It is this kind of endeavor and of ambition that yields ample rewards for the present and paves the way for success in future experiences.

A happy, well rounded, and worthwhile high-school life is my ambition for every Southwest boy and girl.

To The Faculty:

Another year has passed and many students leave the beloved halls of Southwest forever, while others remain to proceed another rung up the "ladder of learning." Before the procession moves on, we, the editors of the Sachem, pause to pay our thanks to those who have so kindly counseled and assisted us through our years in high school. It is to the Faculty, who understand our problems and labor patiently to relieve them, that we owe our greatest debt of gratitude.

Knowledge is a precious thing; it opens doors of opportunity which are closed to those who do not own its power. Therefore, it is with deepest reverence we dedicate these few pages to those who earnestly have endeavored to help us on our halting way.

We hope that in later years, on leafing through the pages of this book, all may remember with gratitude those teachers who laid the basis for whatever success they may enjoy, and, pausing, summon up remembrance of those carefree years they spent in old Southwest.

The Bells

or

The Monday Blues

Hear the dreary school bells,
 Leaden bells!
What a world of brainy thought their monody foretells!
 In the cracking of the dawn,
 While all the students yawn,
 As they hasten to their classes
 All too soon!
 When before first hour it calls,
Boys and girls trudge down the halls
 To their doom.
 And the teachers, ah, the teachers,
 They that are inhuman creatures,
 And so cruel,
 Give a test on Monday morning
 Which often means adorning
The columns of their "judgment books" with "F."
 But when the bell peals forth at three,
 The halls ring out with glee;
 The rush begins.
 So the students all exist
 Just gazing at the wrist,
 At the watch,
And they all are always waiting
For the moment so inflating
 Of the ringing of the bells,
Of the bells, bell, bells,
 For the dinging of the bells,
Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells
For the ringing and the dinging of the bells.

(Written with customary apologies to Edgar Allen Poe and the faculty)

Fruits of Merit

Honor Societies

The Quill and Scroll, the Art Honor Society, and the National Honor Society are the honor societies of Southwest. The Quill and Scroll, an international society for high-school journalists, is open to juniors and seniors who distinguish themselves on the Sachem or the Trail. These students, when recommended by the advisers and approved by the national officials, become members of the Quill and Scroll and are entitled to wear the gold pin of membership and to receive the Quill and Scroll magazine.

The Art Honor Society promotes knowledge, skill, and appreciation of art. In fulfillment of this purpose, a different phase of the subject is studied each year. Membership is restricted to those who have an M average in all subjects and a grade of S or better in art. Candidates for membership must submit a ten-piece exhibit to be passed upon by three disinterested judges.

To be a member of the National Honor Society is the highest honor one can attain in high school. Its membership is limited to the most outstanding seniors, to those who best represent its ideals in scholarship, leadership, character, and service. In an inspiring induction ceremony conducted in the spring, the deserving are officially initiated and receive the golden keystone, the symbol of the society.

Service With a Smile

Service Organizations

The service organizations of Southwest endeavor to make school life smoother and more pleasant for all.

The Student Council promotes understanding between the student body and the faculty and gives students the opportunity to express their ideas for the solution of school problems.

The activities of the Council include regulating corridor traffic, supervising parking, managing the school charities campaign, promoting assemblies, sponsoring swing sessions, and, incidentally, crusading for shelter houses at the car stops, liquid soap in the rest rooms, and other matters which the members think desirable for the happiness of the school. One of its most important departments is the executive committee, consisting of the officers, a representative chosen from the representatives of each class, and a faculty member chosen by the Council.

The Cafeteria Guards under the direction of Mr. Powell maintain order in the cafeteria during the lunch hours.

Certain students are selected to assist Miss Dreyer in the Health Center, guiding and supervising students in matters of health.

Inter-School Student Council conference held at Southwest High School, April 12, 1939.

Miss Dreyer Hygienist

Realizing that health and scholarship go hand in hand, Southwest has given its health center a prominent place in its school organization. There is not a student who has not come in contact with at least one of the health center's three-fold services and who has not benefited in some respect from its presence in our school.

Its primary duty is that of service; first aid in time of sudden illness or accident will be administered by Miss Dreyer, the nurse, or one of her assistants. Education to prevent accidents is also a major objective and one which has prevented much sickness and many unnecessary accidents among the students. By means of lectures or articles in the school paper, health education and rules of safety are taught both students and parents. Private counsel is the third function of the health center. Those who wish advice on definite problems of health may interview Miss Dreyer and from her gain helpful advice concerning their physical welfare.

Because of the heavy responsibilities of her work, Miss Dreyer has assistants chosen from the student body according to ability and scholarship. These girls, in learning the fundamental principles of health, first aid, and accident prevention, help spread the doctrine of Good Health as well as achieve a basis for future medicinal occupations. Their excellent work is well known to those who have had cause to need their aid.

Since the organization of the health centers in our schools, absence has fallen remarkably and good health among the students has aided both scholarship and happiness.

Block and Gavel

Clubs and Societies

The Southwest clubs may be divided into four classes—Departmental, Safety, High School, and Literary.

The Engineers Club, for boys interested in engineering; and the Hestian Club, for girls interested in the household arts, comprise the departmental clubs.

The Drivers Club, reorganized on a self-perpetuating basis, is the only safety club at present. This organization, open to all sophomores, juniors, and seniors, without respect to grades, endeavors, by films, slides and lectures, to promote good driving.

The Hi-Y and the Girl Reserves are the high-school clubs of Southwest. These organizations encourage their members to form new friendships and to find higher ideals. By speech and example, they endeavor to lift the character of the school community.

The intellectual side of life is stressed by the eight literary societies. In their bi-weekly meetings they promote literary activities. At the annual intersociety contest, one of the most exciting events of the year, the clubs attempt to outdo each other in writing short stories, essays, and verse, as well as in oration, declamation, and extemporaneous speech.

"Ayita" was an Indian word;
To a "wise worker" it referred:
"Ayita" is an Indian word;
At Southwest High it means "preferred."

In these, such terms arouse no fears;

Pictorial Record of Kansas City

Most original of the many artistic objects of Southwest High School are the murals above the drinking fountains. There are twelve of these, each the work of an art student in Southwest.

Members of the Art Honor Society, during the year 1937-38, in collaboration with their sponsor, Miss Flora Wright, originated the novel idea of decorating the bare and ugly space above the drinking fountains. Working during class periods, after school, and during Art Honor Society meetings, the twelve amateur mural-painters successfully produced the scenes which are now so popular among the students and visitors in our corridors. The paintings were presented to the school at the annual Art Honor Society induction and attracted immediate admiration.

Each mural portrays some scene in or about Kansas City. The entire series of paintings depicts the growth of Kansas City from a tiny trading post at the junction of the Missouri and the Kansas Rivers to the cultural city of today with its beautiful residential districts, art objects, parks, and boulevards. Each mural has a style and purpose peculiar to its painter, which adds to the interest and individuality of the different scenes. Visiting the various murals, one may see the pictorial record of such significant events in Kansas City's history as Daniel Boone's first visit to the spot of ground on which our community now stands; the arrival of the first train to penetrate the "far west"; the Santa Fe Trail, which is now marked by stone monuments on its winding path through our city; steamboats on the Missouri River; and, finally, present-day Kansas City.

Southwest is proud to own such valuable and artistic additions to its halls. Not only do they add to the beauty of the surroundings but they are a tribute to the talent of members of the student body.

The originality of this work has already gained recognition among various organizations, which have commended Southwest on its fine school project. It is the hope of Southwest High School that these murals will lead to further student endeavors that will be of lasting benefit to the school.

Resolved: That the United States should form an Alliance with Great Britain.

With this controversial question as the subject of their debates this year, the Southwest debate team contended with similar teams of Manual, Wyandotte, Westport and Paseo high schools.

Victory was undecided at all contests between the rival teams as the purpose of these debates is the training and development in public speaking of students showing ability in this field. Hard work and extensive research into the various aspects of the subject, as well as superior delivery, are necessities for all members.

By debating and arguing, the members gain a wide knowledge of current affairs as well as the capability of thinking and speaking clearly. Macaulay described the assets of debate well when he wrote, "The liberty of discussion is the great safeguard of all other liberties."

The night of December tenth marked the success of another Southwest all-school play, which will long be remembered as one of this school's most entertaining performances.

Under the direction of Miss Ruth Castle, a cast of nineteen students presented The Poor Nut, a three-act comedy by J. C. Nugent and Elliot Nugent. The plot of this play centers around a timid college student, John Miller, portrayed by Gilbert Davis. Miller, brilliant in botany but sadly lacking in social charms, works in "Colonel"

Small's University Book Store. The "Colonel," played by Stafford Forbes, also employed Marjorie Blake, a student who admires Miller greatly. Joyce Padgett was convincing as this feminine admirer of Miller. The latter is unimpressed by her attentions, however, as his interest is centered on Julia Winters, a K. U. beauty queen, whom he has never seen but with whom he corresponds. In his letters Miller portrays himself as a handsome athlete and dashing fraternity man, whereas, in reality, he is known on the M. U. campus as the "poor nut."

Complications arise with the arrival at Columbia of the K. U. track team and Julia Winters. Patti Duncan was very satisfactory as the beautiful coed from K. U. Julia is engaged to the captain of the track team but her ulterior motive for visiting Columbia is to meet Miller, who has intrigued her with his letters.

The meeting occurs and Julia is bitterly disillusioned by the shy, awkward "nut." She determines to cure him of his defects, however, much to the consternation of Marjorie and the jealousy of Spike.

Spurred on by Julia, Miller wins the race for M. U., realizes he loves Marjorie, and finally brings about the reconciliation of Julia and Spike. The action which occurs in bringing about this happy conclusion affords ample comedy; the latter is also supplied by such characters as "Hub" Smith and

Before the Footlights Flashed

"Magpie" Welsh, a hilarious pair played by Ben Mantz and Jack Parker, as well as "Doc" Spurney, portrayed by Karl Simpson.

Praise is due the other members of the cast as well as the excellent production and technical staffs.

This year the novel idea of having the ten pairs of twins of Southwest serve as ushers was introduced and proved to be a success. These, dressed in sports clothes and wearing M. U. and K. U. badges, added considerably to the atmosphere of the evening.

McKay, Huttig, Moore

"She's got presence and authority and distinction! And a beautiful mobile face." This quotation from Stage Door by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman is descriptive not only of the Terry Randall of the play, but also of her impersonator, Merle McKay. Her acting was such that it did not seem to be acting. It made the audience aware only of a brilliant performance rather than uncomfortably conscious of the long weeks of practice. This is a quality rarely found in an amateur actress.

Indeed, the entire senior play was so well presented under the direction of Hollister S. Smith that he may well mock the dissenters who say that a sophisticated comedy is out of the realm of high-school actors and actresses.

Stage Door is the story of a group of aspiring young actresses living in Mrs. Orcutt's Footlights Club in the West Fifties of New York. Here stories of thwarted ambition, heartbreaking disappointments, and intense tragedy are coupled with scenes of hilarious comedy.

The pathetic pride with which old Mrs. Orcutt, played by Ann Johnson, recalls her past glory is contrasted with the cheerful confidence with which the young acting students, Susan, Shirley Gillett; and Jimmy, Frank Moseley; anticipate their stage careers. The frustrated ambitions of Bernice, who is alone in her belief in her talent; Louise, who leaves the stage to be married only to return again; Olga, who "spent fifteen years studying under Kolijinski"—to play for a group of chorus girls; Pat, who doesn't want to be a "hoofer" all her life; and Madelaine, who took up acting to get away from Seattle and then is continually shipped back, are exceptionally well portrayed by Betty Hughes, Evelyn Gunn, Virginia Brooks, Mary Louise Goddard, and Irene Glass-man. The gloom shed by the tragic death of Kaye, as played by Martha Harriette Mullen, is relieved by the laugh-provoking antics of Anna Hoffman and Georgette Liebermann as Big and Little Mary, and the sage wisecracking of Barbara Belwood as hard-boiled Judith Canfield.

Against this background Terry continues her struggle to become a great actress even after her friend and roommate, the beautiful Jean Maitland, gracefully played by Betty Jeanne Hess, and her fiance Keith Burgess, played by Philip Moore, desert the New York stage for a career in Hollywood. At last through the aid of David Kingsley, Alfred Huttig, she achieves her long-desired ambition.

One reason for Southwest's fine record in all sports is the ability of the men in charge of these activities. This year Louis A. House coached the varsity football to the third championship in twelve years of league competition. Melvin Bishop directed basketball and helped his team finish in a tie for second place. A valuable addition to the coaching staff is Ray Fisher, who came here from Paseo and whose second-team athletes won the championship in both football and basketball. S. C. See again ably managed the financial affairs of the athletic department.

Football

Southwest began its football season with an unusually promising group of players returning. Their prospects seemed bright after the first game, in which the Ward Cyclones were unable to resist a powerful running attack led by Hibler, Mulcahy, and Greenwood. The Indians finished with a lead of 27 to 0.

The following week the league season opened with another 27 to 0 victory for Southwest, this time against Central, the defending champions. Greenwood and Mulcahy each scored two touchdowns.

Continuing to play the same brilliant type of football, the Indians defeated Northeast's Vikings. After Mulcahy had caught a pass from Hibler and raced forty-five yards to a touchdown, Northeast punted out on the Southwest twelve-yard line. On the next play Greenwood received the ball and evaded tacklers to run eighty-eight yards for another score. Two sustained drives, which ended as Don Pfeiffer and Chalmers Wood crossed the goal line, made the score, Southwest 26, Northeast 0.

Westport gave the team the strongest opposition they had encountered. George Daniels, center, was injured on the kick-off and this loss seriously weakened the line. Throughout the first three quarters neither team was able to score, but in the final period Hibler completed a pass across the goal line to Wilson. After this, Mulcahy intercepted a pass, Greenwood plunged into the end-zone, and Hibler returned a punt seventy yards for a third touchdown. In this thrilling climax Southwest rolled up a 20 to 0 score.

The Indians moved nearer the championship the next Saturday by gaining a 26 to 0 triumph over Paseo. Throughout the first period they were held scoreless by a strong Pirate defense. However, in the second quarter Hibler went over from the one-yard line. The score remained 6 to 0 until the game was nearing an end. Then Greenwood scored twice on line plunges, and Wilson made a touchdown after catching a thirty-yard pass from Hibler.

The team followed this by inflicting a 41 to 0 defeat on the inexperienced Southeast Knights. Many players had an opportunity to score. After Mulcahy, Greenwood, and Hibler had pushed over touchdowns, McMillen brought down a Southeast player behind his own goal line for a safety. The linemen starred again when Berrey returned a kick twenty-one yards and when Jackson ran sixty-five yards for another score. Then the reserves, who had several times showed themselves able to handle the starting elevens of other schools, were put into the game. Jack Mering intercepted a pass and ran eighty-two yards for Southwest's sixth touchdown. This was the first game between the two schools, and should be the beginning of a long and friendly rivalry.

Perhaps this easy conquest made the Warriors over-confident, for in the last battle of the season they failed to show their usual power against a hard-fighting East eleven. Nevertheless, they finished the game with a 7 to 6 victory and Southwest's third league championship.

This record is the best in the history of the school, the total number of points (174) is the largest ever made by a league team, and the unbeaten and untied Indians must be rated as fine a team as has ever been seen in Kansas City.

When the Interscholastic League all-stars were announced, Dick Wilson, end; Jerry Dawson, tackle; Delmar Jackson, guard; Dennis Mulcahy, halfback; and Don Greenwood, fullback, were placed on the first team. On the second team were Blaine Hibler, quarterback and captain; George Daniels, center; Bedford Berrey, tackle; and Charles Campbell, end; while Don Pfeiffer, halfback, received honorable mention.

Another honor came to Southwest when Don Greenwood received the Nigro-Notre Dame trophy given each year to the "most valuable high-school football player."

Not only the stars of the first team distinguished themselves. The second team followed their example by finishing the season unbeaten and untied. They began by conquering Central, 27-0, and continued by beating Northeast, 14-0, Westport, 19-0, and Paseo, 24-6. The climax of their splendid season came with a 26-6 victory over the East seconds which gave them the second-team championship. During their league games the team made a total of 110 points to their opponents' 12. Jack Mering, Jack Luitwieler, Chalmers Wood, and Owen Joggerst played very successfully in varsity games. Second-team letters went to

Basketball

When Southwest rooters entered the Municipal Auditorium for the first basketball game of the league season, their expectations were not very high. The lack of experience of the team and the defeats which the Indians had suffered in preseason games with Ward, the Alumni, and Rockhurst, had not been encouraging. All this, however, was quickly forgotten when Southwest went into an early lead over Central and held that position to roll up a score of 31 to 15. Mulcahy proved the star of the game, making four field goals and three free throws.

Southwest's next opponent was Northeast, a team which had been seen to be strong from the first. The Indians failed to show the ability they had displayed against Central, and the Vikings triumphed, 23 to 15.

Southwest came back to defeat Westport, 26 to 16. A really valuable addition to the team was Charles Black who scored four field goals and one free throw. Black, a center, came here from Topeka, and became eligible for varsity competition with the end of the semester. Ed Matheny also did some nice work, making seven points.

The following week the Indians met the undefeated Paseo Pirates. Although Paseo did not make a large score, their excellent zone defense was in top form, and Southwest was seldom able to come near the basket. The final score stood: Paseo 19, Southwest 13.

If the Indians did little scoring against Paseo, they had an opportunity to make plenty of baskets against Southeast. Every one of the ten Southwest players who saw action in the first-team game succeeded in scoring. The leaders were Black, with eleven points and Mulcahy, with nine. The Indians must have played just eleven times as well as the Knights, for the score was 22 to 2 at the half, 44 to 4 later on, and 55 to 5 at the finish.

Southwest returned to league competition to encounter the East Bears. The score at the end of a close first half was tied at 11-all, but in the third quarter Southwest began to draw away and the game ended with a 32 to 26 victory for the Indians.

The final game with Manual proved to be as thrilling as any fan could desire.

Southwest played a splendid game throughout the first two quarters, leading 9 to 6 at the end of the first period and 15 to 10 at the half. In the third quarter the Indians scored only once and allowed the Trojans to overtake them, thus making the score 16 to 16. The final period developed into a hard-fought struggle for the lead. Matheny made a long shot and put Southwest ahead. Then Barker of Manual sank two successive baskets, and the Crimson moved out in front. A tip-in by Black deadlocked the score at 20-all. Only a minute and a half remained and the crowd was tense. Barker made a free throw and the Manualites cheered frantically. A moment later Black scored with a one-handed shot, and Hibler made the final point on a free throw. When the gun sounded, the Indians were victorious with a score of 23 to 21.

As this left Southwest in a three-way tie for second place with Manual and Northeast, a play-off was necessary to decide which team should accompany Paseo, the league champions, to St.

Louis. It was finally determined that the play-off should consist of three half-length games, and should be held at the Rockhurst field house. In the first game, Northeast defeated Manual; but in the second, Manual returned to overcome Southwest. This loss did not crush the Indians' spirit, for in the final encounter they conquered Northeast, 18 to 16. Since the teams had each won one game, the play-off was decided on a percentage basis in favor of Manual. The evenness with which these three teams were matched is shown by the fact that the winners in each game had been the losers when they had met the same opponents earlier in the season.

Meanwhile Southwest's second team had been making a record to be proud of. In the preseason games before the varsity had hit its winning stride, the seconds beat Ward, 20 to 11, and Rockhurst, 23 to 16. In their first league game, Central was defeated, 39 to 23. John Vandersloot scored 13 of the team's points. The Bravelets continued by winning from Northeast, 22 to 19, and from Westport, 17 to 16. Before the Westport game, Charles Black left the seconds to become a star on the varsity, but his place at center was taken by Carl Nichols, who filled it with great success. In an exciting game with Paseo, Don Simecheck proved the hero, not only by scoring the greatest number of points, but by sinking a basket in an overtime period to give Southwest a 23 to 21 victory. Following a 35 to 20 loss for the East Cubs in which Tom Draney was high scorer, the Bravelets finished a season unmarred by defeat, and won the second-team championship by overcoming Manual, 22 to 12.

Southwest has splendid prospects for a first-class team next year, with four first-team lettermen returning, and as promising a group of lettermen from the second team as Charles Clark, Leon Ditzell, Tom Draney, John Griffin, Eugene Jacobs, Owen Joggerst, Doug Kirk, Jack Luitwieler, Jack Mering, Carl Nichols, Don Simecheck, John Vandersloot, and Don Wysong.

Golf

After leading the field on five Saturdays of play, Southwest golfers captured the interscholastic championship. Gilbert Davis was captain of the team for the second year and individual low scorer of the league with 338 strokes. In second place was Harold Welton of Central, while in third was Southwest's Gordon Armacost with a total score of 342.

The team succeeded in keeping their record down to 1,386 strokes for 72 holes. They were followed by Paseo with 1,454, Central 1,483, Southeast 1,508, Westport 1,570, and Northeast 1,667.

Those who received letters were Gilbert Davis, Gordon Armacost, Bob Weaver, Frank Coday, and Bill Pitt.

Tennis

In spite of the efforts of Southwest players, Westport successfully retained the tennis championship. Frank Moseley, playing his second year for Southwest, reached the finals rank in the singles, defeating Westport's number-two player, Philip Riegelman, 6-0 and 6-1. However, in his final match he met defeat, 9-7, 6-1, and 6-0, at the hands of Jack Ormsbee, number one of Westport. Moseley and Ormsbee later attended the State Tourney at Columbia.

The Tigers also won in the doubles with the twin brothers, Bill and Fred Humphrey.

Letters were awarded to Frank Moseley and Ed Bramson in the singles, and to Jack Beauchamp and Rodney Vandersloot, and Joe Sonken and Allen Benjamin in the doubles.

1938 Track

After weeks of practice, the 1938 track season opened on a cold first of April, when the juniors defeated the seniors, 58½ to 55½.

In the first dual meet with East, the Indians won, 61 to 30. The chief thrill came when J. R. Jones broke the city broad-jump record, and tied the city record in the high hurdles.

The following week Southwest scored a 62 to 28 victory over Northeast. Bill Byers broke a school record with his high jump of 5 feet, 8¾ inches, while Jones outdid his earlier triumph with a jump of 22 feet, 9½ inches.

In an all-city relay meet, the Indians won the 880-yard relay and the distance medley. Although no score was kept officially, Southwest earned the largest number of points on the 5-3-2-1 basis.

The Braves continued victorious in a hotly contested meet with Central, which ended 48 to 43, and in the dual meet championship with Paseo, 49½ to 20½.

At the state meet Southwest placed fifth. J. R. Jones won first place in the broad jump and tied the state record of 22 feet, 2¼ inches. The 880 relay team composed of Byers, Straus, Greenwood, and Wood, also gained a state championship. Other points were made by Wilson in the pole vault, and the medley relay team of Byers, Greenwood, Mulcahy, and Greene.

In the city meet, Southwest gave a splendid performance but fell short of victory. Grant Hatfield had won the 880, Dennis Mulcahy had equalled the city record in the low hurdles, Bill Byers had won the high jump, and many Southwest men had added points for second, third, or fourth places. The score stood Central, 35¾ and Southwest, 35. Only the relay remained. In this the Central runners far surpassed their former achievements, to break the city record with a time of 1:31.6 and to capture the meet, 40¾ to 38.

Swimming

In the annual high-school swimming meet at the Kansas City Athletic Club, Southwest captured second place. Although Northeast won first place in six of the eight events and Manual in the remaining two, the Indians made points in all but one event and accumulated a score of 33 to a total of 30 for the Crimson.

The Viking 150-yard medley relay team set a new record of 1:39.8, while Charles Prichard of Manual cut the time in the 100-yard free style to 1:03.9.

In the 220-yard free style Dick Wilson of Southwest was third and Beachy Musser, fourth. Billy Frederick finished fourth and Charles Metcalf fifth in the 100-yard back stroke. Bob Woodbury won fifth place in 100-yard free style, while in the 100-yard breast stroke Bill Packwood was second and Bob Owens was fifth. Bob Owens also won third place in low board diving. In the 200-yard free-style relay the Southwest team composed of Jerry Dawson, Johnny Jenkins, Wayne McMillen, and Beachy Musser finished in second place as did the medley relay team of Robert Woodbury, Bill Packwood and Billy Frederick.

THE KEYSTONE OF THE ARCH OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

The objective of the Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps is to develop in the student leadership, respect for authority, discipline, personality, truthfulness, honor, and similar qualities which benefit his mind, body, and spirit. These attributes are developed in the student to fulfill more completely his life vocation. John W. Weeks, former Secretary of War, speaking of the R. O. T. C., said: "I know of no substitute in our educational system that will so effectively help a young man before he has entered his life work."

Many other eminent men have expressed themselves upon the value of military training in connection with education. The following comments are especially timely:

"The student who takes the R. O. T. C. course is performing the highest patriotic duty he is capable of rendering."

P. S. Bond,
Colonel, U. S. A.

"Peace can be contributed to by our ability in defense."

Herbert Hoover.

"It is my firm conviction that the duty of national defense, like the general duty of citizens, should be extended and borne by all our people."

Calvin Coolidge.

"If we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our rising prosperity, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war."

George Washington.

"It benefits their morals since those in the unit are loyal towards its purpose and proud of its significance and the meaning of their service."

Thomas S. Gates,
President of the University of Pennsylvania.

"The justification of such a course in this age of peace and general public opinion, essentially anti-militaristic, is that it affords a means of giving a training to young men who at graduation enter the various walks of civil life and yet have such training and experience that would make them available in time of national emergency."

John Grier Hibben,
President, Princeton University.

"Successive presidents of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and the Army and Navy of the United States agree in the judgment that the R. O. T. C. is a useful organization which should be provided for and maintained in our educational institutions."

William Lowe Bryan,
President, University of Indiana.

The Unfinished Cathedral

By Bill Thompson

Round the cathedral door stand sculptured saints—
Martyrs and prophets of an earlier age;
Stern features speak of self-imposed restraints
And lives of patient labor to assuage
The sufferings of men. Beside them stand
Niches containing uncut blocks of stone;
But these, when chiseled by a sculptor's hand,
Will then disclose new figures boldly shown.
Great men have climbed to glory in the past,
But we who strive within the present may Make names that through all history will last
And mingle with the great of yesterday.

More noble forms will yet emerge to grace
The great cathedral of the human race.

Fifth Column

A Story of the Spanish Revolution

By Margaret Welch

MONTSERRAT was gasping for breath and trembling a little when she reached the bottom of the stairs. Of course she knew it was foolish to race so madly, but someone was knocking at the back door, and a knock these days might mean anything.

Senora's voice called anxiously from the kitchen where, with two-year-old Pepita near the stove for warmth, she was busy preparing Christmas Eve dinner. "What was it, daughter? A knock?"

Josefa, their one remaining maid, shuffled into the wide tile hall.

"Let me answer it," she put in sharply. "It might be anyone, you know." But Montserrat was already tugging with surprising strength at the heavy iron bolt. With a mighty tug she swung the door open.

For an instant she could only stare at the dark-eyed lad, some three years her senior, who stepped hastily on the threshold. Then the gulf of two years' absence closed and they embraced each other in fierce joy.

"Ramon!" she sobbed. "Hermanito mio!"

Senora uttered a wild cry of joy and darted to them.

"Ramon! My son! It is really you!"

"Yes, Mama, it is so."

"Oh, I am happy! Happy! I shall burst with joy! You are really here! How is it that you are here, though? How good of them to give you a leave of absence for Christmas. This Christmas we shall all be together!"

The light had gradually died in the boy's eyes.

"No, Mama," he said in more sober tones, "I cannot stay for Christmas. I have only a short time—an hour maybe."

A little wail came from Pepita in the kitchen. Impetuously senora darted in and caught her up.

"Look, look, Pepita," she cried, bringing her into the hall. "See—it is your brother."

Ramon stared incredulously at the little girl whose dark eyes sought his wonderingly.

"My — sister? Pepita? Baby, how you've grown!"

"But then it's been nearly two years since you last saw her," put in Montserrat shyly. "She's two and a half now, and she can talk. Pepita, look. This is your brother. Can you say 'brother'? Do you remember him?"

"Of course she can't remember me!" laughed Ramon. "Come here, preciosita," and then rather hesitantly, "Will she let me hold her?"

"Let you hold her?" exclaimed senora, "Listen to you, asking permission to hold your own sister!" She shifted the soft little body into his outstretched arms. "Here—go to brother."

Ramon cuddled her to him as though she were a precious toy which might break.

"Baby sister," he repeated, unable to believe it, "my own little sister!"

Now that the first surprise of his return had worn off, Montserrat studied him carefully. He looked older than she had remembered him, and there was an air of sobriety about him which had not been present before.

"The war did that to him," she thought. "Always the war makes men out of boys."

Nevertheless, a satisfying warmth glowed within her heart as she watched him fondle Pepita on the edge of the steps. She and Ramon had been closer to each other than most brothers and sisters. Before the war they had been constant companions. They had had their secret hide-outs and codes, had played marbles together in the rose garden, and had balanced precariously on the six-foot wall surrounding their home, until senora in horror had commanded that they get down before they broke their necks.

Her lips curved into a crooked little smile as she recalled those days. They all seemed as close as yesterday now while the gap of revolution and bombs and food scarcity seemed like an unreal dream. What was real was Ramon, sitting on the steps, laughing and hugging senora, teasing and making over the never-before found wonders of a two-year-old baby sister. This was truly a wonderful Christmas Eve even though Ramon could stay only a short time.

The smile faded from her face. Why such a short time? Though such a thought would never have occurred to her happy-go-lucky mother, it worried her a little.

She watched him restlessly as senora led him to the corner of the hall to see Pepita's little Nativity scene. Just what it was, Montserrat couldn't explain, but there was something unusually suppressed and guarded about him. He was watching attentively but he appeared hardly to hear when senora explained all the details of the miniature figures.

"Isn't it bonito?" she was saying eagerly. "We couldn't let Christmas go by without El Nacimiento for Pepita."

Ramon laughed as his sister's tiny hands sought to grasp the Christ Child, but his eyes traveled back across to Montserrat, watching from the stairs.

"And I haven't forgotten my first and dearest little sister," he murmured, sitting down beside her. "You are mine, too, Montsita."

She recognized the undercurrent in his voice. He wanted to speak with her alone.

She rose abruptly and turned to senora.

"Here, Mama, take Pepita. I wish to have some time for my Montsita."

Montserrat's eyes met his swiftly and questioningly. Something lay beneath those words. She was immeasurably thankful that her mother, submerged in joy, noticed nothing amiss, and darted up, taking the protesting Pepita with her into the kitchen.

"Vened," she called over her shoulder, "come, and we'll have dinner. It is almost ready."

As soon as the door closed behind them, Ramon drew her into the corner.

"Montserrat," he said urgently, "you must listen to me carefully and quietly. It was to see you that I came here tonight."

"Yes?"

A chill ran down her back as he extracted a worn envelope from his doublet.

"I am entrusting this to you. Don't interrupt me, for this is very important and I haven't time to tell you much. It is for General Arillo—the positions along the Barcelona front. We hope to take it within the next month."

Her face went white.

"—I cannot carry it further for they have found out that I have it, but you can take it—take it when you go to get the baby's milk and give it to the man who stands on guard there. Tell him it's the milk check—he'll understand. He will see that it gets through. You are level-headed, Montserrat. It is for that reason I entrust it to you instead of Mama. She is a dear but don't tell her about it for she would lose her head and fail me. Promise—promise me you'll do this."

The girl's eyes darkened with fear. "Of course," she breathed slowly.

What did it mean? What was he doing with this important note, and why was he being sought after? In all Madrid they believed him communist unless—her throat contracted in horror.

"Ramon," she choked, hardly daring whisper the words, "Ramon—are you one of the Fifth Column?"

He nodded slowly.

"And it is our creed that the message must get through. We never fail."

"Tell me," she said swallowing hard, "did they see you come here?"

"No, hermanita. Please don't look that way. You can get it through for me."

Senora called impatiently. "Come. Dinner is ready."

They paused.

"Monsita," he added hastily, "you must promise me something else, too. If anything should happen when I leave the house, you must leave the door bolted and act as though nothing had."

"Then they do know you are here," she gasped in terror. "Ramon, you mustn't leave! They'd kill you surely. You're only giving me that note because you know you will not get by. You know they'll kill you, that's why! Stay here! Here!"

"No, chiquita, I cannot do that. If they found me here they would destroy all of us—you and Mama and little Pepita, too. But if I am not here they can prove nothing. Tomorrow when you go to get the milk—"

Senora charged into the hall.

"Ramon Forgas, come here this minute! Dinner is waiting. Montserrat, you are a bad, selfish little girl to keep your brother when we all want to talk to him. Come now!"

The boy glanced at the clock.

"I cannot stay for dinner, Mama," he said shortly. "I only dropped in to—say hello."

Senora's face fell.

"But, Ramon, we have everything delicious to eat tonight. Lentil soup and rolls—yes, and oranges, too. Just a few more moments will never matter."

"No, Mama, not now."

"Then you must come back soon and stay for a long, long time."

"Yes, later," he replied with an odd smile. "After the war we will all celebrate. Where's Pepita? I must tell my own little sister goodbye."

The child toddled into the room sucking contentedly on an orange. Gently, as though he were still not quite sure of her reaction, he lifted her and kissed the orange-stained countenance.

"Goodbye, little Miss Sticky-face," he teased.

Senora threw her arms about him.

"Please, Ramon," she pleaded, "take good care of yourself. So very much can happen."

"Senora," called Josefa from the kitchen, "Venga aqui. The soup is burning."

"Can't you turn off the fire yourself?" demanded senora angrily, and as the acrid smell of smoke pervaded the hall she added, "Lazy girl! Wait, I will fix it."

She dashed back to the kitchen followed by gurgling Pepita.

Ramon turned to the door. As his eyes took in the familiar surroundings a wave of homesickness swept over him. But he swung back the bolt.

"Don't forget, Montsita — tomorrow morning."

"I won't."

"Then adios."

"Adios."

As she closed the door behind him, a queer aching feeling assailed her. It was as though she were closing the door between them forever. She dared not peep through the iron shutters, but she pressed her hot forehead against the heavy door.

Suddenly the sharp crack of a rifle shot cut the night air.

"What was that noise in back, Montserrat?" called senora nervously. She appeared in the kitchen doorway. "Monsita, did your brother go the back way?"

"No," lied the girl steadily, "He left by the front door. That—noise—was probably some sniper."

Senora sighed with relief.

"Monsita," she added, turning back to the soup, "the milk supply is almost gone. You must get some tomorrow."

"Yes, I will."

Slowly her gaze traveled down to the grimy note in her hand and her eyes blurred, knowing her brother would never return. Then she hastily concealed the envelope and rose resolutely. Tomorrow—tomorrow the Fifth Column would again be successful.

The Wings of Daedalus

By Dale Myers

FIRST Engineer Johnson clenched his fist—he had only one. The other, his left, had of necessity been amputated after the terrible Stratus fire in 2137. A split in the firing chamber had started the fuel burning in the holds, and Johnson had stood by his fuel-feed through the blistering heat, and brought the ship to safety after Captain Nagel, then in command, had fainted in his air-conditioned bridge from where he might have directed the descension. Johnson lay in bed for seven months after that, and when he left the hospital, he found that Nagel had iniquitously taken all credit for landing the ship safely. Of course he was promoted, and ten years later, still living on his laurels, Nagel was Chief of the Luxor, the finest ship in Trans-Planetary Travel Service.

Johnson had worked like a dog these ten years after his demotion for "cowardliness" and "incompetence"—as Nagel had put it—and was again First Engineer at fuel-feed post under the hated Captain. This was their first flight together and Johnson had set himself to prove to "Trans-Plan" that he was capable of the position as Captain of the Luxor and that he was neither "cowardly" nor "incompetent" in the face of danger. He clenched his fist and ground his teeth together like a stripped gyroscope gear as he waited for the ascension signal. He had plainly shown his hatred for Nagel, and his hatred had been doubly returned by the Captain, who knew that Johnson could expose him and have him discharged.

But now, the signal came. As his right hand pressed the mercane-oxygen fuel button, a grim smile broke over Johnson's face. The ascension had started and his chance to prove his worth had begun.

Suddenly a terrible, beautiful roar resounded through the Luxor, and with an almost unnoticeable hollow feeling in the stomachs of the passengers, the great three-hundred foot giant of space took to the air. Slowly at first, but with rapid acceleration, the sleek, dark space-liner slid upward, showering the ground behind it with fire. Johnson was thrilled as always, but even more so now, after those many trips on his dilapidated freight rocket during the last ten years. Soon, they were out of the Earth's atmosphere and speed could be increased, with no air to cause friction and uncomfortable heat. Then to the top speed, twenty-one thousand miles an hour. At that rate, it would take only two months to reach Mars, while Johnson's freighter had taken eight.

The flight was under way, and there had been no opportunity for Johnson to show Nagel up as the imposter he was. And now, for two months to come, there would probably be no chance, because the only other place that trouble could come would be in the landing on Mars.

As the days wore on, John actually hoped for an emergency. He knew the Captain could not stand up under the strain of a fused firing chamber, or a heat diffuser breakdown, and although it seemed almost mutiny to think of such things, he actually did hope they would happen.

He saw the Captain very little on the trip, but when their paths crossed accidentally or in the course of duty, their words were curt and few. It was not difficult for the passengers to see that things were at the boiling point between the most vital parts of the whole machine, and a certain tension and distrust grew up among them.

When they were coming in for descension on Mars, Nagel did not reckon with the extra power of the Luxor's motors. At the two-thousand-mile level, he gave full reverse blast as he had always done with smaller ships. Instead of a gentle deceleration, the ship jerked almost completely to a halt, causing a sensation much the same as a "nine-gravities" test of aircraft two centuries before. But worse than that, the jerk so unnerved Captain Nagel that he was powerless to control the ship. Johnson took over control from his fuel-feed station and with the clumsy method which he had to use, held the ship in a slow, steady drop until Nagel recovered himself enough to make descension. Even then the landing was badly executed and jerky, and Nagel was reprimanded by the Flight Superintendent. But Nagel stated in his trip report, "Descension rough because of uncalled-for interference by First Engineer Johnson."

When Johnson read the report, his hatred was even deeper, but he said nothing. Someday, somehow, he would prove false the great injustices done to him and would be in command of a Space Liner such as the Luxor.

After a month wait-over while the passengers transacted their business with the numerous precious metal mines on Mars, they were ready for their return. It was at the very end of the flight season, and Mars was fast moving away from the Earth in its orbit. A few more days and the Luxor's range would be out-distanced by Mars' speeding away. The day for ascension arrived, and just as the ship was ready to rise, one of the freakish Martian storms hit the port. The Luxor was toppled from its stand and the ascension was delayed for two weeks while repairs were made and the ship was set upright again.

When they were finally ready to go, Mars was farther away from the Earth than it had been for any flight ever made before. Johnson was somewhat doubtful as to the chances of reaching home safely, but Nagel, because this flight would make a great name for himself, pushed off in spite of all warnings. The ascension was made with little difficulty and the order for top speed was given, because Nagel wanted to make the trip on schedule, even in the extra space through which he had to travel.

Nagel knew, but did not seem to think, of the ravenous appetite the space liner had at the increased speed. Johnson repeatedly warned the Captain of the dangers of fuel shortage, but Nagel seemed not in the least worried, and above all, did not want to take advice from Johnson.

After they passed Gravitation Neutral—the point where the pulls from the two planets were negligible — Johnson breathed more easily. At least they would not fall into the Sun if they exhausted their supply of fuel.

Finally, even Nagel saw that at the rate the fuel was burning they would run out approximately three million miles from the Earth. He cut down his fuel consumption terrifically, slowing the ship to ten thousand miles an hour, but he was too late. His desire to be famous in bringing a ship in from outside the regular range on schedule had bested him. No amount of fuel rationing would keep the Luxor's motors running.

The ship was in a very dangerous predicament. The fuel would eventually be gone, and the space liner would be in the dreaded "Free Fall." With no fuel for reverse blasts to retard its speed, the ship would fall with no friction at an acceleration which would bring it to the velocity of a meteor in a few hours. Finally, it would fall into the Earth's atmosphere and its duranium carbide sides would burst into flame just as a meteorite would do. The interior would become an oven of writhing, burning humans.

Suddenly there was a horrible silence—the silence of space. The rocket motors had stopped, and the ship was still two and one-half million miles from home.

Captain Nagel's face appeared in the visuator, and his voice quivered as he spoke: "All passengers prepare to abandon ship by means of life-rockets." Johnson clenched his fist. He knew that the life-rockets would run out of oxygen before the twenty days it would take for them to reach the Earth, and they would all suffocate. He switched on the visuator and earnestly told the passengers his plan. "We still have ten days before we will reach the Earth in the Luxor. If you leave by the life-rockets, you will be heading into certain death. If you stick by me, I'll take the fuel from the life-rockets and with it, point the Luxor at the outer fringe of the Earth's atmosphere. The ship will hit this outermost layer of very thin air and from the draw of gravitation make a circuit about the Earth, always drawing closer. It will probably become unbearably hot, but maybe we can save ourselves. When we draw close to the Earth, I'll throw in reverse blast and use the rest of the life-rocket fuel in slowing us down." He paused for a long second, then said: "Are you with me, or do you want to go to sure death by packing yourselves into a life-rocket? One man might make it, or even two, but there isn't enough oxygen for thirty in each of the three of them. I will admit though, that the chances of us all reaching Earth safely are pretty slim."

There was a pause, a click, and Nagel's image said furiously, "Johnson, this is mutiny! I'll have you busted for this. You'll be . . ."—A composite broke upon the visuator's screen. The angry face of Captain Nagel, and the enthusiastic face of one of the passengers. "We're with you, Johnson. I'm speaking for all of us." Then faintly, in the background, he heard, "Yes, we'll stick with you." "We don't want to suffocate." "I'd rather burn quickly than suffocate slowly."

Two hours later a terrific roar smote Johnson's ears. A life-rocket pulling away!! He immediately called Nagel and the first mate's face appeared in the visuator. "Nagel's gone," he almost screamed. "Took a life-rocket and some provisions." Johnson cut the switch. He didn't care about Nagel. The life-rocket would make it to Earth. There was oxygen enough for one man. But Johnson needed every ounce of fuel, and there was one third of it gone.

Ten days later, after he had used half of the remaining fuel to line up the Luxor with the four-hundred-mile outerlimit of air, they plunged into the Earth's atmosphere. The sides of the Luxor glowed red, and even with the insulation, the interior temperature went to one hundred and thirty degrees and was steadily rising. The pull of gravity was drawing them into thicker air, which slowed them down, but also heated the ship from friction. The instrument panel was whirling in front of Johnson as at the last moment he pulled the "full reverse" lever and sprawled unconscious over the board. . . .

The next morning, the television papers in the homes read, "It is believed that the reason no one was killed in the crash was because all were unconscious from the terrific heat and therefore completely relaxed when the ship struck. Miraculously, the ship's short reverse blast slowed the Luxor to approximately three hundred miles per hours before it slid into the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of Brazil, where the survivors were picked up early this morning by the Aqua-rocket Morning Star. The Captain of the Luxor, E. C. Nagel, who abandoned the ship and passengers in a life-rocket, was found early this morning in a wooded area north of the ruins of Dayton, Ohio. After he found that he had been dishonorably discharged by his company, Nagel confessed cowardliness in the great Stratus fire of ten years ago, and completely exonerated the hero of this crash, J. E. Johnson, of claims held against him in the fire. Johnson, whose arm was amputated after the Stratus fire, was made Captain of the Luxor's sister ship, the Zenith, in a special meeting, held early this morning, by the Directors of Inter-Planetary Travel Service."

Our Declaration of Independence

By Bill Pitt

THOSE were grim days, the days of 1776. The gentlemen who attached their names to the Declaration of Independence could not help knowing that they would very likely be hanged if their struggle for freedom failed. Realizing this, John Hancock, however, wrote his name with great flourish saying: "There, John Bull may read my signature without spectacles;" It is such a courageous spirit that is found written throughout this document which took even more courage to sign. Later John Hancock also remarked: "We must all be unanimous, we must all hang together." Benjamin Franklin then answered: "Indeed, we must all hang together, or we shall hang separately!" But regardless of this well-timed humor, there was an air of solemnity throughout the signing of this document. The signers knew too well that they might be signing their death warrants if the desperate struggle for freedom were not successful.

Regardless of the serious air present throughout the signing of the Declaration of Independence, there was at that time ecstatic rejoicing on the part of the people. Soon after the signing of the Declaration, it was read to a crowd in the statehouse yard of Philadelphia. Cries of liberty rang throughout the town after the reading. The shouting citizens pulled down the royal arms, and the great Liberty Bell, with the prophetic words, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto the inhabitants hereof," rang out joyfully. From every court house and meeting place in every town the Declaration was read. This document, simple but full of the deepest feeling, from the first was endeared to the hearts of the Americans. It gave them a goal to which they staked their fortunes, lives, and sacred honor in order to attain.

Not only did our Declaration of Independence supply a driving inspiration for those early Americans, but it had a considerable influence upon the world at large. If one would examine the preamble closely, he would fail to discover one principle that could not be applied universally. It speaks for all men with equal force, and equal conviction. Our Declaration of Independence not only preached internal revolution, it preached universal revolution. It preached the "Christian" idea of government as opposed to the Pagan's idea. It reasoned that the state is made for the man, instead of man made for the state. We can look back now and see the vast effect of this great document upon the world. It involved the reform of the British Parliament, the overthrow of the French monarchy, and the emancipation of Ireland. Nor is this all. When the Declaration was adopted, there was only one state whose principles were similar to the principles that make up our union; now over one hundred of these states are found in the Western Hemisphere alone. We certainly cannot overlook the great influence our Declaration of Independence has had upon the world. Let us hope it continues to spread its message of humanity and freedom from oppression throughout the world.

Probably the most important function of this great document is its bearing upon our everyday life. It was a very influential factor in the abolition of slavery in this country. John C. Calhoun even admitted that our Declaration of Independence was responsible for the failure to make slavery the basis of this republic. Even more important is the part our Declaration of Independence played in the adoption of our Bill of Rights. Many of the denied rights as written in our Declaration can be found in our Bill of Rights. In the preamble of our Declaration we find the endowment of certain inalienable rights such as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The essential principles necessary for this endowment to all are the principles which make up our Bill of Rights. Not only has it had much to do with the founding of our Bill of Rights, but also we can point to our Declaration of Independence as a great factor in the rapid development of our nation during the last century and a half. For, the assurance of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness acts as a strong incentive which make this phenomenal growth feasible. Thus, our Declaration of Independence has certainly played a large part in making these United States a greater, more powerful, and democratic nation.

If one would read the Declaration with thoughtfulness and conviction, I am certain it will arouse in him something more than its mere economic and political importance. It goes farther than that. Thomas Jefferson stated in simple inspiring words the rights of the individual which have since become the watchwords of freedom. As one can see, these words do not merely apply to those struggling colonists, but to all men. The greatest phrases in this document are, undoubtedly, those that can be applied universally. Nowhere else outside of the Good Book have words come closer to expressing the deep feelings found in the hearts of men.

The Declaration would have had little beyond the appeal of its stirring words if there had not been back of these a stronger, more lasting support. Our Declaration, perhaps more than any other political document, fully recognizes the Creator. It appeals to the laws of nature, and of "nature's God." It appeals "to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions." And finally, it closes with a "firm reliance on the protection of Divine providence." This full recognition of God, as of all political creations, is the Declaration's strongest claim to immortality.

Therefore, America has back of her highest ideals, wisdom, and experience, Divine authority. It is written on all the pages of our history beginning with our great Declaration of Independence. It is stamped on all our coins as well as our lives—In God We Trust. There is no doubt why we have risen from a weak nation to the strongest nation in the world in only one hundred and fifty years. As Dr. Richard Burton so aptly put it in the last stanza of his poem, The Ultimate Nation:

Or shall an ultimate nation, God's own child,

Arise and rule, nor ever be conquered;
Untouched of time, because, all unde-
filed,

She makes His ways her ways eternally?

On Myra Hazel Amy

By Miriam Brasher

THIS is the saga of Myra Hazel Amy, who in many ways has been a "thing of beauty" and a "joy forever," the seat of unbounded mirth and wild escapades.

It was in just these early, sleepily-smiling months of spring five years ago that Daddy brought Myra Hazel Amy home to Mother—shining and new in all her glory of power and youth. The power has remained but the youth has been replaced by a slow dignity and certain majesty of demeanor.

In those first years she stood out from among her contemporaries with a dazzling light, but as she grew older and we grew up, she was outshown by newer but never better models. Thus it was that she took on the appearance of a respected and arrogant dowager, to mingle condescendingly among the radically changed of her kindred. There is always about her that quality of being alone, even in a crowd, a sort of ethereal magnificence. So grew the tradition surrounding Myra Hazel Amy and she won a place of high merit in the hearts of all who knew her, so that even in these days when she is rapidly being retired "fools who come to scoff" remain to ride.

Now that I am old enough to drive Myra Hazel she has been living the life of a gay old dog, but certainly, underneath she must appreciate all the ribbing and the racing, for five years of merely "driving" are terribly boring compared to the hilarious, sidesplitting scrapes the youngbloods have pulled her into and out of. Too, she must realize that it is to us that she owes the rebirth of new windows, new tires, and the replacement of those brakes that used to sound like something out of Poe.

There was a time, to be true, when Myra was rapidly developing that middle-aged slump, but the uplifting qualities of young laughter and the feeling of being desired and useful once again gave new impetus to her absolute demand for repairs. Eventually the gang of fifteen "regulars," all of whom Myra Hazel knows and loves, conspired to shame the family into purchasing the necessary glass to replenish the gaping holes in her sides by threatening to manufacture some draperies of a rich and extravagant hue to decorate her chassis and serve as curtains; or even worse, and an idea which she did not favor at all, to mar her dignity with three-ply boards.

The loud and unceasing cries were heeded and there came the day when Myra zoomed from her garage bursting with pride to make the rounds beaming with effulgent splendor. She was so changed, indeed, that for several days there was a faint hush of awe in the atmosphere. Soon, however, the spirit of kindly derision rose once again and because of the acquired glory several were jokingly suggesting the installment of a nickelodeon just to put in one corner—it wouldn't really take up any room at all—with the more conservative element demanding a well-stocked refrigerator.

Because of her especially unique qualities Myra Hazel has become a fixture and symbol of happiness in one of the gayest years we have ever spent. There are memories of the merry hours of speechless laughter while in her presence that surely will be always remembered by most of us when the gang is separated and gone, and Myra Hazel Amy, herself, will be no longer one of the family circle.

There was the time, too, when tragedy entered the life of Myra Hazel with a forceful blow. The murky afternoon, when horror of horrors, we locked bumpers with my own history teacher with a heartrending smash, and a resounding boom that struck fear to our very hearts and left our consciences heavy as lead for many days afterward.

If you perhaps might wonder what could be the purpose in writing of this subject—it is merely that in living for the zest and breathlessness of it as we are doing, as we never have before, or probably never will again, the remembrance of a car, and not a beautiful specimen at that, will be forever associated with our times. We hope, too, that in days soon to come, when the "regulars" are scattered far and wide over the states, she may have moments, when with a rush of passing feet and a gasping of happy laughter, former days may be recalled. Then surely, all the insults and the ill-treatment, all the embarrassment and chagrin she felt so many times because of us will be forgiven, and her wide, empty seats will half wish to have us back again, in spite of the undeniable fact that we were the ones who left her with a hacking cough in her motor and a grating in her gears. Perhaps then, she will be able to laugh over the horrible experience of being exposed to ridicule when left stranded upon a busy thoroughfare because we never ceased to try to run a kingdom with a dime's worth of gas.

Strange it is that such a one as Myra Hazel, backed by tradition and experience, could lend herself so readily to these wild escapades and joys. Strange, too, that of surroundings of many other varied interests it should be this that would invite such unparalleled comradeship and amity.

So here I leave the saga of Myra Hazel Amy, and let it always be said that "she was a good car."

An April Day

By Mizzell Phillips

The golden sun has risen;
The grass is wet with dew;
The birds outside your window
Have just awakened you.

It's a sunny April morn
With spring upon its way,
Yet the distant cloudy skies
May chase the sun away.

A rumbling peal of thunder
Announces coming rain,
To bring the growing flowers
Their moisture once again.

The sparkling, crystal raindrops
Come dripping from the sky,
And form a magic picture
To charm the watcher's eye.

Skippy Makes Mischief

By Constance Fuller

MR. GEORGE HAMILTON looked very discouraged as he walked down Summit Street that evening in March. Well, he was discouraged. Wasn't that mortgage coming due next month? Where could he get enough money to pay it? And if he didn't, what would happen to Mary and Bill? His face brightened as he walked up to the window of the Reed Motor Company.

How marvelous these new automobiles were! Every night on his way home from work he stopped to look at them and wonder if he ever would own one. But tonight something other than the new Reed models caught his attention. It was a large placard announcing a new contest sponsored by the Reed Company. The object was to write in less than two hundred words, "Why I like the New Reed." The grand prize was to be five thousand dollars. Mr. Hamilton nearly jumped for joy. Here was his chance! It was easy! Hadn't he looked at these models night after night, thinking how wonderful they were and how much he wanted one? Five thousand dollars! That would more than pay the mortgage. He could even buy one of the cars in this very window!

On a Saturday afternoon two weeks later, Mr. Hamilton was hard at work on his contest entry. He was finding it more difficult than he had anticipated. Somehow it was hard to put into words his feelings about the new Reed models. Occasionally he had to ask Mrs. Hamilton for help. Mrs. Hamilton, however, was not very enthusiastic over the contest. Of course it would be wonderful if they won, but she was doubtful about the chances for success. After one of these pauses for assistance, Mr. Hamilton felt truly inspired and was approaching the climax in a fine manner when he was interrupted by his young son Bill.

"Dad, Dad," he called. "I've just taught Skippy a new trick!" Skippy was a very peppy little black and white dog who had followed Bill into the room.

"Don't interrupt me, son. I'm busy."

"But Dad, I've just taught Skip a new trick. Don't you want to see it?"

"Not now, Bill."

"Gee, Dad, it will only take a minute."

"All right, what is it?"

"I've taught Skip to carry a letter in his mouth from one person to another. Here, watch!" He gave the dog an envelope and Skip carried it across the room to Mr. Hamilton. "He can take it off a table and do the same thing," continued Bill, placing the envelope on a desk near him. Standing on his hind feet Skippy deftly lifted the envelope off the desk, carried it to Bill's father, and then jumped about with glee as Bill praised him. Skip loved to show off!

Ordinarily Mr. Hamilton would have been as pleased as Bill over Skippy's trick, but today he merely nodded and said, "All right. Now will you let me work in peace?" As Bill left he muttered, "Dogs, dogs, dogs, that's all I hear about. I'll never get this entry finished."

The morning of the last day that contest entries could be mailed Mr. Hamilton lingered a moment before leaving for work. He looked with pride at the neat white envelope lying on the table in the hall. "Mary!" he called. "Don't forget to see that this gets mailed."

"I'll be sure to mail it," she replied, adding as the door slammed, "I haven't seen George so excited for years."

It was two hours later that Skippy stood at the open front door watching the postman start up the front walk. Skippy and the postman were very good friends. The postman often petted him and told him he was a good dog. Skip pondered whether the postman had seen his newest trick. Maybe if he showed it to him the postman would give him a piece of meat or something else to eat as Bill did. Looking around for a piece of paper to carry he noticed an envelope on the hall table. . . .

Usually the Hamilton family listened to Reed's radio program with interest. Tonight they listened in gloomy silence. Mr. Hamilton was in a bad humor. He had been ever since the day Mrs. Hamilton had phoned him so excitedly to tell him that his contest entry had mysteriously disappeared. He had gone home early that night and they had searched everywhere but it was not to be found. It was then too late to write another so they had been forced to give up. Tonight, the winner was to be announced.

Now an official of the company was speaking. "Tonight," he said, "I have the privilege of announcing the winner of the five thousand dollars, Mr. George P. Hamilton." He went on to announce some lesser prize winners but none of the Hamiltons heard him.

Bill was the first to recover from the shock. "Gosh! How did that happen?" he asked.

Then they all spoke at once. Mrs. Hamilton and Bill kept asking the same questions. "How did the entry get there? Who mailed it?"

Mr. Hamilton didn't care so much about how it had gotten there. He had won. That was all that mattered. Now he could pay the mortgage, and buy an automobile. While this commotion was going on Skip felt rather neglected. Perhaps he might attract some attention by doing his new trick. He found an envelope on the hall table and carried it to Mrs. Hamilton. "Why, Skip, what are you doing with this?" she asked. "I left this on the hall table to mail tomorrow."

"Mother!" shouted Bill. "That's what happened to the contest entry! Skip took it and gave it to the postman."

"Why, I believe you're right," declared his mother.

"Skip!" was all Mr. Hamilton could say. "Skip, old fellow, come here. I don't know whether I ought to hate you or like you for this, but I guess I'll just buy you a big steak and let it go at that!"

An Antiquing Mother

By Kenneth L. Cooke

UNFORTUNATE is he whose otherwise normal mother is a victim of antique hunting fever. I do not know how or when my mother first became an all too willing victim of this epidemic, but I do know that she is now a fiend on the subject of broken-down furniture. When she hears the word

"antique," she is like a blood-hound on the scent. Everything must wait until she has discovered the antique and examined it closely.

We are safe no place now. Even when on a trip we are continually interrupted and delayed by outbreaks of this habit. If we are hurrying to reach a certain city by nightfall looking forward to a good hotel room, bath and dinner, and mother sees a decrepit chair before a dilapidated shack, we know all is lost as mother is sure to stop us while she examines this worthless (to us) piece of furniture. Yet if dad wanted to stop for a game of golf, or I for a swim, she would declare the idea "ridiculous." It is only on the subject of antiques that her common sense deserts her. Furthermore it is not as though she wanted any particular article, for seldom does mother find anything on which she feels like spending her money, but always she hopes she will unearth some priceless gem. Buoyed up by this everlasting hope she is never too tired to stop and look at antiques. My geographical ideas are regulated by the Sheraton chests of Virginia, the Dutch benches of Pennsylvania, the old English silver of Louisiana, and the Spanish and Indian relics of the Southwest.

When home again, we add more confusion to our house by putting a few more broken chairs, tables, and cracked pieces of china and glassware into our attic to await the day when they can be rebuilt, reupholstered, and remodeled.

After mother fell heir to her grandmother's fragile old chairs, life became a dangerous adventure at our house, for if we thoughtlessly sank into one of these relics by mistake a shrill scream from mother sent us bounding out of the chair with our hair on end and our spines creeping. I am sure mother would forgive me should I break my brother's leg, or even should I break my father's leg, but should I break a leg of one of those over-aged chairs it would be many a day before I could again gain her favor.

One of the many disadvantages of this mania of hers is its possible effect on our social standing. When we have visitors, one of them will invariably sit on one of the antique chairs and, if he does, there is no "social security" at home. When this happens, mother sits very straight and talks to the visitor in a forced tone of calmness. Even my mother cannot disguise her relief when the visitor leaves with the chair none the worse for its ill treatment. The visitor in the meanwhile, little realizing his lucky escape, probably wonders why his hostess looks so tense and worried.

Everywhere I go I recognize this disease in those about me, and the sad thing is the insanity is increasing. When a person cannot sit in his own chair, drink from his own glass, and must give up the pleasure of comfortable and substantial sofas and chairs for the sake of mere beauty, something should be done. Of all the minor problems of America, I think this is the most urgent in its need for recognition and correction.

Little girl friend Annie's come to our school to stay
An' dig the whispered gossip up and blow good grades away;
To shoo the teachers out the halls an' up the steps to creep
An' talk up high an' shake her head, an' learn her lessons deep.
An' all us other pupils, when the homework things is done,
We set around in study hall, an' has the mostest fun
A-list'nin' to the tattle-tales 'at Annie tells about
An' the Nemesis 'at gits you
Ef you

Out!

Wunst they wuz a little boy, sneaked out with the car
An' when he took his date that night, away out thar,
Mrs. Grundy saw him speedin' (you should o'heard her bawl!)
An' when they turned the police court 'round, he wuzn't there at all!
An' they seeked him in the drug-stores, an' all the movie shows
An' seeked him in the City Morgue, an' ever'wheres, I s'pose;
But all they ever found wuz thist his car spread all about!
An' Nemesis'll git YOU,
Ef you

An' onetime a little girl 'ud act up right in school,
An' honestly I'm telling you, she broke most ev'ry rule!
An' wunst when she stayed overtime, an' teachers wuz there,
She razzed 'em and sassed 'em an' said she didn't care!
An' thist as she had kicked her heels and turn't to run an' "cut,"
They wuz a great big hard exam a-standin' in the rut,
An' it flunked her through the ten-weeks 'fore she knowed what she's about!
And Nemesis'll git YOU,

An' your best pal mutters, an' the teacher yells: "YOU!"
Ef you hear a band a-playin', an' the tune is gay,
An' the studyin' stuff 'at's in you is all squenched away—
You better mind yer parunts, an' yer conscience an' yer fright,

Dear Diary

(Excerpts from the perennial diaries of 205)

Woke up at the crack of 9:30 after 17 hours of sleep.

Richard Guthrie

Went to school and tried to learn. Impossible!

John Tilson

Among other things I got an electric razor with my initials on it but I can't find anything to use it on just yet.

Bill Butler

I am beginning to dislike girls for they bore me so with their meager chatter.

William Raines

Mother had never ridden with me before so she was a little nervous at first. Bob had ridden with me so he was even more nervous.

Betty Maximoff

It took Mother and me almost two hours to get me dressed. Those tuxedos are the dickens.

Wallace McGowan

Having told Mother early this morning that I must be awakened around nine o'clock, she came blithely bustling into the quiet of my room at seven thirty, saying cheerfully, "When was it you wanted me to wake you?"

Miriam Brasher

I forgot to pack my toothbrush and so Mother sent me a telegram to be sure and buy one.

Joe Williams

Got up at five and struggled into my tux and went down to dinner and promptly spilled soup on my lapel—ah!—what luck! Oh, well, soup always leaves an impression.

Allen Browne

It hardly seems possible that that little fat girl I used to play with could blossom out into such a pretty girl. Miracles never cease.

Bill Kelley

Just before dinner we had company but I was thinking of dinner all the time and wasn't my usual self.

Barbara Dew

The boy at the gas station makes fun of my driving.
